While variety and diversity of caste, language, religion and geographical features have given India a rich cultural heritage; they have also been responsible to some extent in creating the socio-economic disparities in the country. Such disparities are particularly apparent in rural and urban settings. Concerted efforts have been made ever since independence to bridge the gap between rural and urban India. A number of programmes and schemes have been launched with a focus on poverty alleviation, better livelihood opportunities, provision of basic amenities and infrastructure facilities. These programmes indeed have helped to reduce the wedge between rural and urban areas but still large gaps persist. The inequalities exist not only between rural and urban areas but they can also be seen within the rural as well as urban areas.

Urban India is heterogeneous and characterized by wide inequalities both in terms of income and access to social and physical infrastructure. In urban areas the rich and posh colonies with all the amenities coexist along with slums with absolute lack of minimum facilities. The slums acutely epitomize the deprivation and inequalities in urban India. The slum dwellers do not have access to many of the benefits of urban development as they have emerged in haphazard manner and are considered illegal in nature. The living conditions of slum dwellers is worst than that of the rural poor because of limited space and higher density of population, lack of basic services like water, sanitation, unaffordable healthcare, unhealthy environment, poor education facility. The locational, social and economic segregation of slums presents special problems in the provision and expansion of education. Besides the impact of current changes in urban governance with regard to financing and provision of urban services on access and equity in education remains uncertain. It is in this context that the issues and concerns relating to universalisation of elementary education in urban areas in general and slums in particular need to be paid greater attention.

In the above backdrop, NUEPA proposes to organize a “National Seminar on Universalisation of Elementary Education in Urban Areas: With a Special Focus on Slums” from February 12-14, 2007 at New Delhi. The main purpose of the Seminar is to provide a forum to the practitioners and policy makers to reflect on issues and problems of educational planning and management in slums. It is expected that the Seminar would provide inputs for policy formulation and designing appropriate strategies for the improvement of educational status of slum children.
